That's What Led to the Arrest of Gas Company Fireman

Insurance money paid on the death of his wife early this week to John Force, a fireman for the Bridgeport Gas Light Co., is credited by his friends with having led to his arrest for attacking Mrs. Tessie Tokasha at her home at the foot of Howard avenue yesterday noon.

Force obtained $250 insurance, spent $150 for his wife's funeral and squandered the rest in drink. He was almost penniless when arrested yesterday, his last dollar having been given to the five year daughter of Mrs. Tokasha, whom he encountered as he entered the woman's home.

He sent the child out and then it is alleged attacked the mother, whose cries brought Patroiman Malone to her assistance. Force was sober and repentant today and denied attacking the woman. An Appealing Address of Splendid Work by the Democratic Nominee lican Party as Present Managed That Appeals to Men of Patriotism — Thoughtful Dis-

Hartford, Oct. 22.-Judge Simeon Baldwin was greeted by an immense audience when he spoke at Hartford Thursday evening. At the request of many independent Republicans we give the text of his able adress below:

There was an ovation for the Demo cratic standard bearer, the audience rising as they applauded, in tribute to him, Mayor Smith called for three cheers for the nominees and they were given. The band played "We Won't Go Home Until Morning" and Judge Baldwin then addressed the meeting, speaking as follows:

speaking as follows:

I always have a home feeling in Hartford. Here my mother was born and bred, and my grandfather lived a long life. Here, while myself in active practice at the bar, my business often called me, and here, of late, several months in the year, on my daily walks before court. I have become familiar with the new city, surrounding the old, with its splendid fringe of parks and pleasure grounds. Here I have often spoken before public audiences, but, as Mr. Chandler of Rocky Hill has truly said, not for eighteen years on matters of political character.

The last time I made a political speech in Hartford was at a Democratic rally in the Cleveland campaign of 1892. There have been many changes in the courants of human thought. Be Presented to Judge Gager in the Superior Court Some Time Next Redding, Oct. 22 .- As the result of a in the world since then—many changes in the currents of human thought. But there are certain principles underlying our system of government which these currents may run by, but which they can never wash away or impair. Some of these I am going to ask you to consider soberly with consultation held at Danbury on Thursday between A. G. Barnett, chairman of the Republican town comimpair. Some of these I am going to ask you to consider soberly with me tonight. I shall not dwell on side issues. Let me on this occasion confine myself to the vital questions which this political campaign has brought before the people of Connecticut. I say vital; and vital they are to the continued prosperity of our little State.

little State,
Some of us may have been hoping against hope, for many years, that the people would get their blinders off, and see things as they are; See that the Republican party had outlived its time, had fallen into bad hands and bad ways. The time has come this fall. The blinders are off. I feel like the old maid who at last became engaged. Talking over the coming wedding with her lover he suggested that the music should be, Mendelssohn's Wedding March. "No," she said, "I like one of our grand she said, "I like one of our grand old hymn tunes better. Let's have the one that goes with that sweet hymn beginning—

"This is the day I long have sought And mourned because I found it not,"

We meet here as Connecticut men.
We have to elect Connecticut Congressmen and those who in turn will choose a Connecticut Senator. What politics should these men stand for when they go to Washington? What does the good of Connecticut demand that they should stand for? Let us begin by clearing the ground. There are certain local measures that our people generally want adopted, and which ought to be adopted. Both parties favor these. Both parties, in their platforms, call for an employers liability law, a public utilities commission law, a repeal of the statutory pleasure; and greater still the House of Representatives in which the smaller States are almost invisible.

The Statesmen of 1783 saw that, protect the States as they would, they would become largely subject to federal control, so far as the power of Legislation, or of executive action, on the part of the United States, might extend. They therefore limited its extent in plain words. They granted certain powers to the Federal Government, and no more. They said that all powers not granted were reserved to the States or to the people. Sixty years ago, some of the States asserted that a power to secede from the Union was thus reserved. They were wrong. Constitutional principles demonstrated and the Civil War decided that they were wrong. The Supreme Court of the United States, when they came to pass upon it, said preme Court of the United States, when they came to pass upon it, said that this was an indissoluble Union of indestructible States: Two great truths. The Union is indissoluble. The States are indestructible.

And what does that mean? Not simply that the States cannot be blotted out of existence. It means that their constitutional position and privileges cannot be altered, except by an amendment to the Constitution of the United States. It means that to an amendment to the Constitution of the United States. It means that to each State belongs all Legislative power over its territory and its peop..., except so far as that Constitution has taken it away. This has always been the funadmental doctrine of the Democratic party—what I called at New Haven the other day, one of their true, sound, undying doctrines. Here is the great line of division between us and the Republican party. They are for extending the Federal authority in new directions. They are for pushing what authority it has got to its utmost limits; and many of them are for stretching it beyond the limits.

begin by clearing the ground. There are certain local measures that our people generally want adopted, and which ought to be adopted. Both parties, in their platforms, call for an employers liability law, a public utilities commission law, a repeal of the statutory limit of $5,000 as damages for negligence which causes another's death. There are other local measures favored by one party and not by the other; such as stiffening the corrupt practices act, which the Democratic platform asks for, and increasing the Governor's veto power, which the Republican platform asks for.

I have no time tonight to talk about any of these minor things. I want to ask you to go down to the We Connecticut Democratis see in it an attack on the reserved sovereignity of the States.

This was the position of President Roosevelt while in office and it is his not to be held bound to examine for local representatives of his party and follow their dication.

There is nothing new in this. It has been done by many, to some extrine of the West. We see in it an attack on the party and to to the federal government would be so limited that the reserved sovereignity of the States.

and which he has not disavowed. It states that in the early part of this year, while Republican legisla-tion pending in Congress was opposed by certain Republicans the President felt it to be his duty to the party and felt it to be his duty to the party and to the country to withhold federal patronage from certain senators and congressmen, who seemed to be in opposition to the administration's efforts to carry out the program of the party platform.

The President feels that the value of federal patronage has been greatly exaggerated and that the refusal to grant it has probably been more use-exaggerated and that the refusal to grant it has probably been more useful to the men affected than the appointments would have been. In the preliminary skirmishes in certain states like Wisconsin and Iowa and elsewhere, he was willing in the interest of what the leaders believed would lead to party success to make certain discriminations; but the President has concluded that it is his duty certain discriminations; but the President has concluded that it is his duty now to treat all Republican congressmen and senators alike, without any distinction. He will now follow the usual rule in Republican congressional districts and states and follow the recommendations made by Republican congressmen and senators, of whatever shade of political opinion, only requiring that the men recommended shall be good men, the most competent and the best fitted for the particular office.

The people have long heard that this was the way in which business was managed at Washington. Now they know it. The President of the United States says he will follow what he calls the "usual rule" and that it was a few months ago his duty to his party and his country to withhold federal patronage from certain Republican senators and congressmen, because they opposed the policy of the administration. ident has concluded that it is his duty
